CLAIMANT TO BIG ESTATE. MAINE MELANGE. to $12,000,000

A Poughkepsie, N. Y , despatch says Caspar Cronkrite was a gin manufactur-er, who lived in Holland during the eighteenth century. He died 100 years ngo, leaving an catate estimated at $12.-000,000. His will was a curious document. It left the whole of his vast estate to be held in trust by the Govern-ment, and provided that "One hundred ment, and provided that "One hundred years after my death my estates shall be divided equally among the heirs of my brothers James and Jacob Cronkrite" These statements are told as facts by George Cronkrite, an engineer employed on the Ne vburg, Dutchess and Connection Rallroad, who calcust to be a direct heir to James Crorkrite and who has begua legal proceedings to get pos session of the share of the vast entate in Holland which he says belongs to him He says that he first learned of the big sestate about a year ago, when a man from Holland informed him of his interest in it. Sinos then he has Lean investion in est in it. Since then he has been investigating the matter, and he says he has procured proof of the validity of his olaim, which he has placed in the hands of an etterness.

gaining into maper, and no says he has precured proof of the validity of his claim, which he has placed in the hands of an afterney.

The story Cronkrite tells is strangely romanth. Caspar Cronkrite, the frick mannfacturer of Holland gin, was disappointed in love in his youth. It soured his disposition and made him a very eccentric individual. His brothers, Jheob and James, who had been associated with him for years, tired of his ir-solbiity and left him, coming to this choosity. Caspar went on amassing richter, but he evidently could not live happily without his brothers. One day he wrote to them and asked them to recurt to flolland. They refused to go back, land Caspar's brotherly love then turned to bitters, their will providing for the distribution of his estate among the descendants of his brothers, who should be alive 100 years after his death.

When the brothers came to America, James lecated at S'anfordville, Dutchess county where he lived the rest of his life. What became of the other brother is not known. George Cronkrite believes that he is the only living direct descendant of the burden of the burying ground at Stanfo d-ville. He saye that the handred years have expired and that (a par-Cronkrite, will be used to the burden years, and the burden day on the possession of the Dutch government, rady to be distributed among those who can prove their identity as legal heirs.
